

As an initiation manager, I have had a fair share of challenges and fun events during this project. This course has been an amazing journey leading to a good portfolio and an amazing project I personally would take further with the team outside of this course. When it comes to the tasks, I helped deliver the products such as product backlog, project initiation, progress report, risks, and mitigations, and I helped refine the business case.

Personally, I have come across times I needed to take initiative outside of my role as the initiation manager and pitch in places like motivating the team and doing extra work to make sure the team is ahead of schedule with its work. My work has been more than just an initiation manager since I would explain it more like me being a jack of all trades. I have pitched in places where the team needed me the most, and this is the accomplishment I am most proud of.

During this course, the most important thing I have learned is generosity through completing tasks when others cannot. If the entire team only did their task and never pitched in, the entire collective would struggle. There have been a lot of events where a member of the team pitched in when another was sick or absent, which led to a stronger team bond and improvement in each other's work. I have learned to step out of my comfort zone and initiate and decide the tough choices once the team cannot decide or once the team cannot agree on the solution. In the end, one of the biggest lessons this course taught me is that trusting and motivating the team has had the biggest impact on the result for our project, since the outcome of the project could be drastically different if the team was unmotivated. There have been lesser issues we have come across during our work that we could have handled better. An example of that is we did not organize enough and the delivery of tasks 8 and 9 has not been completed. The issue was resolved once the team asked Mr. Jefferson for detailed feedback on tasks 8 and 9 in person instead of giving up. What I learned from that interaction was the fact that every problem can be solved even if it seems too late.

I was lucky enough to attend many lectures and practice hours. The experience gained from those interactions helped shape a drastic part of the tasks completed and the result. Interactions with the TAs and Mr. Jefferson have helped in a lot of scenarios when the team felt lost or confused. A statement from Mr. Jefferson helped us improve our work by a long shot and that was the fact that our work was always very hard to read and academic. This course is about business and "Businessmen don't read" (Jefferson. 2026).

In the future, I would suggest that updating the team and communication would be improved. Another segment that should be improved is a personal one, and that is more accepting to change once there is improvement needing to be done on work I felt was perfect in the first place. I am very thankful for my team in the end and the project we delivered was some of the best projects I have had in my career.
